

THE TOEFL® TEST

TOEFL® stands for Test Of English As A Foreign Language. It is used to test the English language skills of students from non-native English speaking countries that want to study or work in countries that use English as the language of communication. Almost all the Universities in United States, Australia, Canada, New Zealand and United Kingdom use TOEFL® to test their students. This is used to determine whether the students can enter into their university programs or attain scholarships. In the TOEFL® exam, four-language skills, which are effective for communication, are tested. These are reading, listening, speaking and writing.

The test contains passages that you will be required to read and then answer questions that follow. After that, a lecture is given and you are required to answer more questions. Some of the tasks will require you to answer verbally. Then you will have to write two passages.
